

why did you do this to me??

Posted by parten - 05 Mar 2010 13:09

hello twk community this is mostly a message to your warcraft server admins.

why the F* have you cleared off my levels?

i mean i spent Fing AT LEAST 30 hours on the warcraft server and then i stop playing a couple of months(playing fallout 3) and then BAM!! my levels are just dissapeared WHAT THE SHIT?

can i get an explanation?

Firstly, don't come on to our forums mouthing off at us as, to be frank, you'll more likely get a permanent ban from all our servers and then you'll not only have no levels, but also not a server to play on.

The WCS server has been upgraded and as part of that we reset the levels. This was some time ago. There were numerous posts and multiple warnings on both the server and the website. The server is now running a heck of a lot more smoothly, with loads of new maps and races.

Parten - don't give us any abuse. We are not the type of community in the slightest that will tolerate anything like that.

Of course you can... We forgot to stop the community in time waiting for you to finish playing other games so you could come to the wcs server again...

It is possible that the WCS mod itself does an automatic cleanup of the database and removes data it considers to be old. I'd need to check the mod's website for more information to confirm this but I can't do it from where I am at the moment.

I found this in the mod's configuration ...

```
// autocleanup - will cleanup if your server reaches 6000 players. Recommended if you suppose to reach that value !!
```

```
// its also important to set a correct deletedays, recommended is 7 or 14 days
```

```
&quot;wcs_autocleanup&quot; &quot;1&quot;;
```

```
// delete player after X days of inactivity ! [ 7 = default ]
```

```
&quot;wcs_deletedays&quot; &quot;7&quot;;

... so it appears that the mod does indeed clean up its database. We know from experience that the mod can be buggy and that the database can become very large and cause issues.

However, this should only kick in if the database reaches 6000 players. So I think in this case the mod has reached this level and removed some of the inactive players, which unfortunately seems to have included yourself 😊

Either way, no admin has done this maliciously.
