

Vista user password circumvention

Posted by liger - 02 Aug 2009 19:22

anyone knows how?

the person didnt use the "hint" field either + its notebook which makes switch HDD's a pain and its silly to format coz of that 😞

The user is the administrator account? I guess you could use Hiren's boot disk to try and copy the stuff out, not sure but it may also have a user password util.

Hack the local user admin account, use a pass hacker tool to hack the sam database.

yeh coz thats an everyday activity for me >_<

any suggestions are much appreciated especially the ones i can execute like this copy on stick

stick the stick (hah) in notebook

run some command

I know there was a really easy hack .iso for XP. where u could just insert cd, boot from it and it would ignore all pass'es. Is there such a thing for vista?

PS: i understand how ppl can forget pass for forum X, but jeez pass for ur pc is like top priority :/

Agreed, I would prefer to smash the hd and thats all 🤔 i have a the idea that the admin pass reset for wxp also work on vista, the sam model is the same.hirens boot cd will do the job, if you are unable to dl it, pm me and I can put one online.
