

ESET + big .mkv file=trouble?

Posted by liger - 06 Sep 2009 12:35

Lately my eset has been acting up with on the fly scan of 2gb .mkv file that is beaing downloaded thru torrent tinyurl.com/ld8bku onclick="window.open(this.href);return false;

It starts with HEAVY disk activity, then sudden use of ram up to 96% (have 2 GB here) at which point u cant do anything but wait.

And wait

and then this is what i get

Real-time file system protection file Warehouse.13.S01E04.720p.HDTV.x264-SiTV.mkv.!ut

a variant of Win32/PSW.Agent.NNI trojan cleaned by deleting

Event occurred on a file modified by the application: C:Program Files (x86)uTorrentuTorrent.exe

Is that even possible? This isnt some file renamed to .mkv, this is a real video file. Can something else be imbedded in video extension .mkv that executes on running video (thru MPC)?

now i notice that theres some kind of memory leak when playing mkv file (only tested with HD files)

That would prolly also explain why ram goes up when nod is scanning.

BTW: when playing mkv (and on the fly scan) even though 1GB+ of ram is being eaten by something i cannot see by what in task manager.

found the problem

klite mega codec pack v5.0.0

just sad

PS: altho antivirus doesnt kill windows now, playing mkv still eats lots of memory after a while

Im at 20min mark and have somewhere around 600MB eating RAM a buggy software will even put Blue Gene to a crawl.

Now i know its not ALL mkv files.

Only the mad men series produce "this";.

So its either something with the files itself or its size. Coz they are 2GB compared to my other mkv files which are smaller

Im getting there, step by step 😊

PS: HD >>dvd

free >> $$

but ninja >> pirate

www.hardware.info/en-US/extcontent/ZpqZa..._with_malware/ "onclick=""window.open(this.href);return false;"

Security software provider Trend Micro has yesterday warned that a large number of drivers offered by gaming peripheral manufacturer Razer via its support site were found to be infected with a Trojan wouldnt it be ironic if tunes downloaded one of those drivers? 🤔
